Dear Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee Members,

As the committee advances the next Surface Transportation Reauthorization bill, we respectfully request incorporating the Build Housing, Unlock Benefits and Services (Build HUBS) Act into the legislation. The Build HUBS Act presents an important opportunity to drive economic growth, strengthen public-private partnerships, and better connect communities through aligned transportation and economic development investments. The bill could also contribute to delivering much-needed attainable housing near transportation - a vital goal as our country faces the greatest housing shortage in generations.

Building near public transit and transportation infrastructure enhances the myriad of benefits for transit systems because it increases land use efficiency, boosts transit ridership, lowers public infrastructure costs, saves taxpayers money, and ensures people are well connected to housing, services, and better paying jobs. This development pattern, known as transit-oriented development (TOD), increases economic growth, enhances local tax-bases and fiscal health, and creates desirable, connected communities. Transit-oriented development can also produce much-needed housing, which is crucial as the nation seeks to address a national housing shortage.

For over a decade, the U.S. Department of Transportation's Railroad Rehabilitation and Improvement Financing (RRIF) and the Transportation Infrastructure Financing and Innovation Act (TIFIA) programs' transit-oriented development provisions have been burdened by red tape and inefficient administrative practices. These obstacles have been so costly and onerous that only one transit-oriented development project has been completed with the program's support in the past ten years. The upcoming Surface Transportation Reauthorization bill offers the opportunity to reform these programs to unleash their economic potential for communities nationwide.

The Build HUBS Act is fundamental to unlocking the benefits of these programs, supporting public-private partnerships, and enabling developers to invest more effectively in communities. The bill introduces reforms to remove burdensome administration, shorten underwriting timelines, and expand credit validation options. The bill will also extend TOD eligibility for projects through 2031 and provide relief under NEPA by codifying categorical exclusions for infill developments and office-to-residential conversion. Housing developed through the attainable housing designation will also receive enhanced Treasury-based financing.

This is a responsible way to promote more development around transit, leverage private capital, and create long-term economic value not just in big cities, but also in small towns and rural communities. Transit-oriented development plays a key role in promoting economic growth, housing access, and connectivity. We support this legislation and are eager to see it enacted in the next Surface Transportation Reauthorization bill. Thank you for your consideration and your attention to this important request.

Signed,
